Brief Report

Department of Law, VGU organized a one day workshop on Intellectual Property Rights (IPR). The session was conducted online through Zoom Platform and it was attended by 60 people. As an expert for the session, Dr. Bhupinder Singh, discussed what is not included in IPR and also discussed the Patent, CopyRights, Geographical Indication (GI) etc. Nowadays, as soon as some goods are placed on the market, the related technical information will lose its confidentiality. Such information is on the increase, and is often of very high proprietary value. If law should leave such information in the public domain without doing anything about it, all newly created information will instantly be imitated, only to discourage the incentive to create. The result will be that under such circumstances information can no longer well function as an asset. To be short, inimitable information will be valuable as property, while information easy to imitate is meaningless as such.

Important Topic Covered:

- Protecting Intellectual Property
- Optimizing process
- Efficient use of IPR in the field of Research and Innovation
- How to safeguard your intellectual property?
